Overview The University of Algarve is a young state university founded in 1979 and located in the southern part of Portugal, one of the most touristic regions of Portugal. It is an important centre for cultural, scientific and technological development, with strong regional, national and international ties, offering students the opportunity to explore various careers as they gain transferable skills.

The University has witnessed a significant growth in terms of student population, modern facilities and the quality and diversity of programmes on offer.

The University student population is today close to 8,000 and employs over 700 academics. It has three faculties and four schools, offering a range of quality undergraduate and postgraduate courses in beautiful academic settings.

International Mobility Recently, there has been an increase of foreign students from more than 60 countries due to the internationalization strategy of the University of Algarve. The quality and diversity of European Masters and Doctorates, combined with postgraduate courses open to students from all over the world justify the magnitude of this mobility. The University of Algarve participates in the Erasmus+ programme since 1993 and holds an Erasmus Charter. The internationalisation of the University is well demonstrated by the successful partnership in various projects under several cooperation programmes such as Lifelong Learning, Erasmus Mundus, External Cooperation Window, Tempus and Atlantis.

Of its 10,000-student population, 10% are foreign students, of which nearly half are at the University under bilateral agreements and cooperation programmes, mainly Erasmus and Erasmus Mundus.

Visiting staff (teaching and non-teaching) and students from other countries contribute to new ways of thinking and add to the dynamic academic population a multicultural atmosphere. International students can either study at the University through an exchange programme or as full students.
